Extra Credit: "The Nature of Work" by Robert LeFevre

---

1. What is work?
2. Why is work important?
3. What is a person really doing when they're yearning for a vacation as their main interest in life?
4. Is a man with nothing to do truly happy? If you disagree, explain why.
5. What are the three types of work, and what are examples of each?
6. Of the three types of work, name examples of each that you've done around the house.
7. Do you think it is fair that those with rare skills get paid more (on average) than those who do normal things exceptionally well? For example, compare the wages of a football player and a skilled plumber.
8. Are/were your parents strict or lax when it comes to household chores? Do you agree with their approach? If not, what will you do differently with your own children?
9. What is the appropriate attitude to have towards your work?
10. How did completing this extra credit assignment make you feel? Are you proud of the work you've accomplished, or is this just more busy work? Explain your answer.

The happiest and most successful people are those who work and work hard.
